Council's Maclean office to re-open tomorrow

THE Maclean office of the Clarence Valley Council will re-open tomorrow (Thursday).

Acting general manager, Des Schroder, said there was still some cleaning up to do following a devastating storm on Tuesday afternoon, but the office would be open to the public as normal from 8.30am.

“That will also provide access to the Service NSW facilities that are housed within the building,” he said.

“I would like to thank our staff, the carpet cleaners and the tradies who jumped into action immediately to make sure disruption to the public could be kept to a minimum.

“I would also like to congratulate the people of Maclean and surrounds for the way they pulled together and helped each other out during what is a difficult time.

“They showed true community spirit.”

Council has offered to accept self-haul storm-related green waste at the Townsend waste transfer station until January 12.

Release ends.
